WEEKLY BULLETIN

March 7, 2016

THIS WEEK IN HISTORY: 1876- Alexander Graham Bell patents the telephone
March 7, 1876, 29-year-old Alexander Graham Bell receives a patent for his revolutionary new invention—the telephone. In the 1870s, the Bell family moved to Boston, Massachusetts, where he found work as a teacher at the Pemberton Avenue School for the Deaf. While in Boston, Bell became very interested in the possibility of transmitting speech over wires. Bell wanted to create a “harmonic telegraph,” a device that combined aspects of the telegraph and record player to allow individuals to speak to each other from a distance. Three days after filing the patent, the telephone carried its first intelligible message—the famous “Mr. Watson, come here, I need you”—from Bell to his assistant.
